Fire Mountain, Oceanside, CA

There are homes that borrow from mid-century modern design. And then there are homes that are mid-century modern from the bones up. This single-level Fire Mountain residence is the latter. Built during California modernism's golden era and lovingly reimaged with over $100,000 in thoughtful renovations. To your right, a custom floor-to-ceiling glass room divider, a defining hallmark of California Mid Century design separates the entry from a sun-drenched private office. The panels are frosted with hand-detailed Asian botanical motifs, the work of a celebrated artist. It is simultaneously a structural element, a design statement, and a piece of art. Straight ahead, the original painted brick accent wall grounds the entry in the honest materiality that mid-century architects championed. Original exposed beam vaulted ceiling the single most sought-after feature in authentic Mid Century architecture rise above the entire living room space. They are structural, celebrated, and irreplaceable. Brazilian cherry hardwood floors, run beneath them in an unbroken sweep from living room to dining room. The floor-to-ceiling stacked stone fireplace with raised hearth is the soul of the living room. It functions as architecture as much as amenity a sculptural focal point that on cool North County evenings is the best place to be. You have open concept from the living room, past the dining area and into the fully remodeled kitchen. The kitchen itself honors the same design philosophy white cabinetry, quartz countertops, a statement range hood, and the original painted brick accent wal
